Introduction

Consumers are recently more interested in the health benefits of foods in order to promote health and/or reduce the risk of certain diseases. This has increased the global market for functional foods for over a decade. Thus, the International Conference on Agriculture and Agro-Industry focusing food, health and trade is organized this year by School of Agro-Industry, Mae Fah Luang University. The goal of the conference is to bring together scientists/researchers/experts to discuss the latest scientific developments and current issues on health foods, food safety and practical business to capitalize on functional foods and nutraceutical trends.

The program includes nation and international keynote speakers, oral presentations and poster sessions addressed to agricultural science and technology, food science and technology and food trade, focusing on safe food, good quality and health products. This conference will include participants from Thailand and overseas.
